

LONG MEADOW BUTTERFLY SURVEY REPORT 2024

This year's survey was undertaken on a weekly basis from May to September but several weeks were missed because of bad weather. Recording would normally also take place in April but as with last year the weather was unfavourable for recording purposes. Butterfly Conservation confirmed that this Summer had been very poor for butterflies: a third of the species had their worst year on record and no species had their best.

This has been borne out by our own results. Last year we recorded 891 butterflies but this year only 539. Four species previously present were totally missing from this year's count – Small Copper, Brown Argus, Common Blue and Peacock – and we must hope that they reappear in 2025. The numbers of all the other species recorded were down, in some cases dramatically. For example, 117 Speckled Woods were recorded last year but only 33 this year, but even so they were still the fifth most abundant species in this year's count after Meadow Browns, Gatekeepers, Ringlets, and assorted Whites.
